To our valued partners,

American College of Education is proud to provide our affordable, high-quality programs to your staff and employees at a reduced tuition.

“Student-first” is more than just a buzzword at ACE. It’s a value that drives every decision we make. It’s why we haven’t raised our tuition since 2016. It’s why we awarded $2.5 million in scholarships in 2022. It’s also why we build partnerships with organizations like yours, making our programs more accessible to more professionals who deserve attainable continuing education opportunities.

Our commitment to keeping costs low for our students is also why we are making some changes to our grants and scholarships model. Starting January 18, 2023 – instead of our current flat rate by individual program level tuition reduction grant – your staff and employees can take advantage of a universal 3% tuition reduction on their ACE program. This new model will help streamline and standardize the discount across all our program levels, from micro-credentials to doctoral degrees, and allow us to be more sustainable to keep our tuition accessible.

In the coming weeks, we will provide you with updated flyers and collateral to help you communicate our new tuition reduction grant to your staff and employees. Until then, you can reach out to Tony Miller, vice president of field operations and partnerships, at tony.miller@ace.edu if you have any questions.

Thank you for your continued partnership,
American College of Education
